Verisys Corporation Opens Operations Center in South Jordan
Health Data Company is Considering Moving its Headquarters to Utah Also

South Jordan – At an opening ceremony for its new Utah operations center, John J. O’Shaughnessy, CEO of Verisys Corporation, announced that the company is strongly considering moving its Corporate Headquarters to Utah from Virginia. The operational component has been successfully relocated to South Jordan, Utah and Verisys is carefully weighing the benefits of transferring its Corporate Headquarters. “We are impressed by the ample, technology savvy workforce Utah has to offer,” remarked John J. O’Shaughnessy, CEO of Verisys. “We are committed to expanding our business in Utah.”

Verisys Corporation is a provider of health care professional data aggregation to ensure regulatory compliance, minimize legal and reputational risk, prevent health care waste, abuse and fraud, and improve the quality of health care delivery in the United States.

The state of Utah has offered Verisys $835,000 post performance incentive. The company expects to hire up to 100 new full-time positions over the 7 year life of the incentive. “The opening of the new Verisys Corporation operations center in Utah is significant in several ways. To have the operations center of the leading health care data provider in the state it underscores both Utah’s vibrant Information Technology industry, our reputation as a safe and secure place for business and our productive workforce,” said Jason Perry, executive director of the Governor’s Office of Economic Development.

Additionally, the company was offered incentives by the City of South Jordan. “We are honored and pleased that Verisys has chosen South Jordan City for its new home in this great State of Utah. We welcome this wonderful company and its employees to our beautiful City. Verisys brings to our community a high standard of modern technology with their information based systems. We are pleased to have the Verisys group in South Jordan,” said Mayor W. Kent Money, Mayor of South Jordan.

“We congratulate Verisys on its new expansion of operations to South Jordan,” says Jeff Edwards, president and CEO of Economic Development Corporation of Utah. “This move brings not only 100 quality jobs, important capital investment, and a quality company to our state in a down economy, but also shows how our communities, state and local businesses come together to help grow our economy and create opportunities for our residents.”

“We want to thank the Governor’s Office of Economic Development (GOED), the City of South Jordan and Economic Development Corporation of Utah (EDCUtah) for their partnership in this endeavor.” commented John Benson, Verisys COO. “Without their help we could not have realized the value of our investment in Utah and its people.”
